Task 2

The movie described in the text above proposes a crucial idea: taking everything on the Internet with a grain of salt. While the film and the text go into detail about how easy it is to fake personal information online, I would like to talk about one more flaw of the Internet. That being the fact that hoaxes and conspiracy theories are by miles easier to spread. The first factor that fosters the spread of a hoax online is social media. Since social media algorithms are efficient enough to make just about anything gain momentum, this also applies to any outrageous conspiracy out there. Secondly, the advancement of technology makes people more gullible. One might think: "Well, if there are corporations buying and selling my data, there might as well be a mind-controlling space laser out there". This alone makes the Internet a dangerous information resource.

Stories of the month: summer break accomplishments
Columbus, Ohio, 01/09
Presented to you by Jane Doe

The summer break is finally over and we are ready to welcome you back at school! Of course, we bet that lots of new things happened to you during these two months. Many students, ~~we~~ teachers and even graduates were eager to share their summer break stories with us — take a look!

Coming up first we have Jacob, our recent graduate. According to Jacob, he "felt motivated enough to do anything after graduating". That is why he decided to participate in a marathon! "It was my first time ~~run~~ running a marathon, but I reached the goal without giving up", comments Jacob. He plans to participate in charity marathons in the future. Good luck to you, Jacob!

Next, we have Dylan, who had his first solo concert this August! "I was nervous at first, but the round of applause made me relax", says Dylan. Dylan plays the accordeon and usually performs in an ensemble, but this time he was by himself! ~~Con~~ Congratulations, Dylan, we hope to see you perform more!

Lastly, there's Mr. Williams, who grew and harvested five kilos of strawberry! Gardening is his ultimate passion, so he feels it was not only a good way to take a break from school, but also an achievement. Good job, Mr. Williams!

That was it for this week's rendition of Stories of the month! Feel free to submit your own stories and subscribe for the school magazine to stay tuned! Write your own story and... goodbye!

Task 2

The movie described in the text above proposes a crucial idea: taking everything on the Internet with a grain of salt. This, of course, is an obvious message. However, history shows that it has to be proven time and time again. One of the reasons to say that the Internet cannot be trusted is the fact that information on the Internet spreads like wildfire. Any hoax online is easy to spread, as long as there is a number of gullible people to believe it. It is especially easy to fake information if it regards some sort of danger. Any outrageous conspiracy is likely to catch on if it is linked to trafficking rings, mind control and various similar topics.
