Task №4.

Dear Max,

I hope that when you get to read this letter you'll be a much healthier and happier person than I am right now. I set out on this journey hoping to overcome my laziness and apathy and strive to be a better man. May I never regret my decision and may you be proud of me.

First of all, I would admire it <sup>if</sup> you started going to the gym. We both had it coming for a while, and it surely would be the right thing to do. Besides, I hope you're taking care of yourself normally as well. You must have found a trained therapist and switched your diet to better suit your new lifestyle.

Second of all, I'd want to ask you what it took to get to where you're now? I've long~~er~~ feared this change, though I deemed it necessary, so I wonder how you got used to a different way of living?

Hopefully one day I'll know the answers to these questions.

However, for now I just want to thank you. I'm grateful for you believing in me and I ~~am~~ ~~praying~~ that you take pride in knowing that I set my sights on being just like you are. Welcome me on a path to a better, healthier life once and for all.

Thus, I conclude my letter by once again praising your self-discipline and congratulating you on ~~all~~ your many and counting victories.

May you read my message from start to end with a big smile on your face and a fire in your eyes. Keep proving your worth! SP

Best wishes,

Max from the past
