It was a dark rainy night. I was getting ready for my big presentation at the scientific conference and couldn't shake that feeling of impending doom that seemed to be following me around.

Suddenly, the door opened. I immediately felt a sense of dread. Nervous and frightened, I decided to check on it. It turned out that it was my best friend Sarah. She came over to help me with the project. Sarah was always willing to lend a helping hand to those in need. She was also patient and understanding, and always took the time to listen to her classmates' problems. Sarah had a warm friendly smile and wonderful shining eyes that put others at ease. At that moment her eyes were looking straight into my soul. "I see that you're nervous. Why don't we practice together?" Sarah offered. "Sure, that would be great!" I exclaimed.

We spent the next half an hour going over my slides and talking through my key points. Thanks to her ~~encourage~~ encouragement, I felt much more confident when ~~X~~ it ~~was~~ was finally time to present my project. The next day, when I finished my presentation, I could see the impressed looks on the participants' faces. ^x

I could not believe that something like that could happen. The jury unanimously awarded me the first prize and the audience applauded. I was overjoyed and realized that Sarah's help had truly made a difference.
