Task 2.

Communication is a crucial part of every person's life. But does it differ from conveying a message through acting? I believe that the author of the ~~text~~ given text would say that it is fairly similar. I can agree to some extent, but it is important to outline some differences.

Firstly, ^{compared to} ~~unlike~~ acting, real life communication is less calculated. Under unexpected stressful conditions a person can act irrationally, say unpredictable regrettable things. In those situations people do not think about context and what they actually communicate. Secondly, when you are watching a drama, most of the story is communicated to you. It is easier to speculate and explore beneath the surface, since the emotions and sometimes the thoughts of a character are clearly shown to you. In real life it is not that easy, especially because we often do not give people the benefit of the doubt, forgetting that they have their own story too.

To sum up, there are some major differences between communication through acting and in real life.

Task 3.

Reasons motivating students to study abroad.

Introduction

It is evident that more and more students all over the world choose to study abroad every year. What motivates them to do so? I have conducted a survey among ~~fore~~ 155 foreign exchange students in our university. The aim of this report is to analyze and compare this data, speculate on the possible ~~reasoning~~ reasons and future developments.

Trends and comparisons

The most popular reason both among ~~Ba~~ bachelor degree students and master degree students is ~~to~~ having future career prospects (34% and 47% respectively), although the latter seem to appreciate that aspect more. Another popular reason in both groups is the addition of language learning prospects (15%.

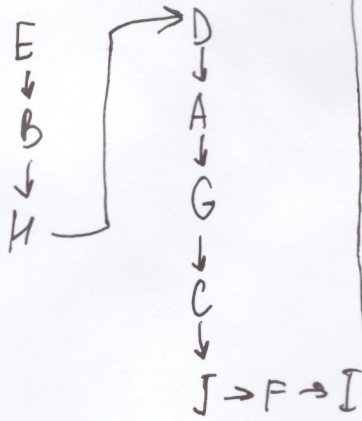

18%). The explanation to this is that ~~both~~ all types of students are interested in learning and getting a good career. Nowadays a lot of employees are expected to know more than one language. ^{A big portion of} The bachelor degree students are studying abroad to increase their maturity and self-confidence (21%), while the master degree students are not very interested in that aspect (5%). ~~It is~~ The opposite situation can be seen in ~~such~~ responses about travelling opportunities (4%, 14%). This can be explained with the ages of these groups. Equal parts of participants chose better understanding of cultural Future development values and biases, as this advantage is not affected by age.

Future development

I can only assume that studying abroad will not recede in popularity any time soon. It offers very attractive advantages for students of all age groups and levels of education: while bachelor degree students will enjoy the language learning prospects and increased maturity, the other group will pay attention to the future career prospects.
