Task 2

Task 1: 14

I have recently read an article on Wikipedia, dedicated to Realism, which is an artistic movement well-known throughout the world.

The text perfectly outlines crucial historical facts, including outstanding artists and groups, special traits of Realism in both social and artistic aspects and its connection with the contemporary movement. For instance, one can learn about Vasily Perov or Gustave Courbet. Another example is the base rule of Realism: simplicity and clarity of depiction. By the way, the author states some probable reasons for such appetite for truth, mentioning photography.

To my mind, Art is an essential part of our social life. I wholeheartedly believe that it establishes connections between people of different epochs.

To sum up, the article is really informative and well-structured. It perfectly reveals the role of Realism in the History of Art. If you feel eager to widen your outlook, search for "Realism" article on Wikipedia.

Task 3

I woke up in the morning and found myself in an unfamiliar place with only sand all around... I had no idea about what was happening but for some reason I felt so relaxed as I had never felt before. My mind was clear and my heart ^{was} overfilled with happiness.

Suddenly, I heard a voice. It was a familiar one, but I couldn't recognize it. My curiosity made me get up and I saw my best friend standing ^{nearby} ~~silently~~. So, I was the one who started the conversation:

'Where are we now? What are we doing here?'

I saw misunderstanding in my friend's eyes.

'Don't you really know?', he asked.

Memobook 2

I looked at my watch and got pale. It was the day of the maths exam.

He asked: "Don't you feel sick? Maybe we should go home?"

I was so nervous that I didn't ~~even~~ ^{any more} mind where we were or why we were there. I was shouting at my friend when everything suddenly stopped.

When I got up next morning I found myself lying in my bed in our countryside house. My mom and friend were sitting near me. My mind wasn't clear anymore. The only thing I could be thinking about was my maths exam.

I turned to my mother:

"Why am I here, having rest but not studying?"

She smiled and kissed my head.

"Because it's the end of July, darling, the right time to relax but not work", she said ~~stately~~ in a mild voice.

At this point I remembered everything. Later that day I ~~was~~ had got sunstroken on the previous day. Finally, I got told that I okay. So, this is how luckily this story ended.

Realism

8 Did Realism ~~emerge~~ appear in France or in Germany?

Realism was an artistic movement that emerged in France in the 1840s, around the 1848 Revolution. Realists rejected Romanticism, which had dominated French literature and art since the early 19th century. Realism revolted against the exotic subject matter and the exaggerated emotionalism and drama of the Romantic movement. Instead, it sought to portray real and typical contemporary people and situations with truth and accuracy, and not avoiding unpleasant or sordid aspects of life. The movement aimed to focus on unidealized subjects and events that were previously rejected in art work. Realist works depicted people of all classes in situations that arise in ordinary life, and often reflected the changes brought by the Industrial and Commercial Revolutions. Realism was primarily concerned with how things appeared to the eye, rather than containing ideal representations of the world. The popularity of such "realistic" works grew with the introduction of photography—a new visual source that created a desire for people to produce representations which look objectively real.

The Realists depicted everyday subjects and situations in contemporary settings, and attempted to depict individuals of all social classes in a similar manner. Gloomy earth toned palettes were used to ignore beauty and idealization that was typically found in art. This movement sparked controversy because it purposefully criticized social values and the upper classes, as well as examining the new values that came along with the industrial revolution. Realism is widely regarded as the beginning of the modern art movement due to the push to incorporate modern life and art together. Classical idealism and Romantic emotionalism and drama were avoided equally, and often sordid or untidy elements of subjects were not smoothed over or omitted. Social realism emphasizes the depiction of the working class, and treating them with the same seriousness as other classes in art, but realism, as the avoidance of artificiality, in the treatment of human relations and emotions was also an aim of Realism. Treatments of subjects in a heroic or sentimental manner were equally rejected.

Realism as an art movement was led by Gustave Courbet in France. It spread across Europe and was influential for the rest of the century and beyond, but as it became adopted into the mainstream of painting it becomes less common and useful as a term to define artistic style. After the arrival of Impressionism and later movements which downgraded the importance of precise illusionistic
