Task 2

In "Zero-waste" grocery stores' written for The News Ian Wright laments how big of an issue packaging waste has become and due to the difficulty of recycling it contaminates the ocean ~~and~~ and tap water. Which is why he was surprised to discover a supermarket without any packaging and instead storing the products in self-service dispensers. The founder of a "zero-waste" market in Hong Kong thinks that these stores satisfy the consumers' desire to ~~decrease~~ <sup>lessen</sup> plastic's impact on the environment. Governments are also finding legislative solutions, like the ~~new~~ European ban on single-use plastics. Many stores worldwide started enforcing a "no plastic

In "Zero-waste" grocery stores' written for The News Ian Wright laments how big of an issue packaging waste has become and due to the difficulty of recycling, it contaminates the ocean and tap ~~water~~ water. Which is why he was surprised to discover a supermarket without any packaging. Turned out, the supermarket was part of the "zero-waste" movement originated in Europe, that aims to solve the waste problem by discarding packaging altogether and instead storing the products in self-service dispensers. The ~~founder~~ <sup>owner</sup> of a zero-waste market in Hong Kong thinks that these stores satisfy the consumers' desire to lessen plastic's impact on the environment. Governments are also finding legislative solutions, like the European ban on single-use plastics. Many stores worldwide started enforcing a "no plastic bags" policy, though some American states were heavily opposed to that. Still, the zero-waste movement has a bright future as awareness of the issue keeps increasing. As for me, I fully agree with the goals and actions of the movement, because plastic waste is a grave issue

I suddenly turned into a book, lying on a moist with blood cobbles floor of the basement. As my captor picked me up, I could do nothing, but think of how utterly infuriatingly insulting this whole endeavour was. Nothing left of me, but a shard of what I once was — one of the Ancient Ones, the Eye in the Heavens, the ceaseless watcher, reduced to this! Confined in a book ~~with~~ with no vision, no movement, by some wannabe collector of all people.

As I pondered ~~my~~ this unfortunate turn of events, my captor has already ascended the stairs, which lead to an antique shop. I, of course, knew nothing of this, so when he put me down on some sort of a hard, slightly inclined surface, with a reverent exhale of the words "another gem for my collection", I was filled with something I have never felt ~~before~~ before. It was an ugly and coiling feeling that I recognised on the faces of mortals I ~~had~~ have met ~~before~~ <sup>face to face</sup> and, ~~when~~ startled, I realised that this was what humans called dread.

Decades passed and finally the store has gotten a new owner, seemingly unaffiliated with the last one, but extremely interested in parting with all of the items in the store, for a pretty penny of course. One day, the bell ~~was~~ above the door rang, and in came a nicely ~~groomed~~ groomed, dirty blonde ~~haired~~ haired gentleman, slightly above ~~build~~ build, thirty years of age with an unassuming ~~face~~. He went through ~~the~~ the isles with a keen eye and finally stopped in front of me with a near-silent "a-ha!". He picked me up and went to the owner.

- How much for this book? - he asked, ~~holding~~ holding me out to show the man at the register.

~~The owner gave a short harrumph: "Well, let's see... First acquired somewhere around ~~over~~ sixty years ago... still in perfect condition... I believe this will ring you up to about ~~over~~ two hundred pounds."~~

~~The man sighed deeply, but still reached into his pockets to take out his wallet. While he was finding the necessary bills, the owner opened a worn-out notebook and asked loudly: "And your name? For the books, you understand, store's policy and all that."~~

The owner gave a short harrumph.

- Well, let's see.. First acquired somewhere around sixty years ago... still in pristine condition... I believe this will ring you up to about a hundred and fifty quid.

The man sighed deeply, but ~~still~~ still reached into his coat pocket for his wallet. While he was counting the bills necessary, the owner opened a worn-out notebook and asked ~~loudly~~ loudly:

- And your name? Just for the books, you understand, store's policy and all that.

- Blackswene. Elias Blackswene.

- ~~Very~~ Very well, the book is yours, thank you for your patronage.

The man left the store ~~with~~ without another word, gently holding me in his hands. Moments later, he deposited me on some sort of a soft leathery surface and I heard something ~~to~~ start rumbling. Maybe we were in ~~that~~ that ~~old~~ old human contraption, what ~~was~~ was it called?... A car?... Sounds about right. ~~That~~ Elias's voice broke me out of my ~~own~~ thoughts:

- Finally! I finally got a lead in this case. Chasing this book ~~just~~ only knowing the symbol on its cover was a task and a half, but I am finally close to finding that missing girl... ~~It~~ It will probably be best to open this at the office, hopefully Simon is already there...

The man fell silent again, and I suddenly felt a burst of gleeful hope. If Elias reads out of my book, then... Then I might finally be free.

Soon we arrived at our destination, the man parked, picked me up, ascended a few flights of stairs to what looked to be a nice tidy office with two desks full of various papers, files and ~~and~~ two unwashed mugs of coffee.

- He still isn't here? That's ~~so~~ slightly odd for him, but oh well... - ~~the~~ Elias muttered, closing and locking the door behind him. He sat behind one of the desks and opened me. Yes, after years upon years of waiting! I was filled with ~~excitement~~ exhilaration as he started reading

 the verses ~~was~~ written in an unknown language on the first page. Elias didn't know what he was reading, but he couldn't stop and suddenly with a shout of surprise he dropped the book and clucked his head. ~~When he opened~~ When he opened his eyes they were a bright golden yellow and I... I could finally see again.
 As I happily chuckled at the thought,
 the man whirled around, trying to find someone else in the room with his now unseeing eyes.

- Who... who is there?! Show yourself!

- Oh, hello Elias, - said the voice inside the man's mind, - apologies for the deception, but... It seems we have a lot of work to do...
