TASK 2

Nowadays people become increasingly cognizant of the malevolent and invidious impact plastic has on their lives and environment. That is why various approaches are taken in order to minimize its usage. Ian Wright recently shed some light on the concept of "zero-waste supermarkets" in his article "zero-waste" grocery shops published by The News. According to the writer, the project has already gained its popularity all over the globe. It implies ~~eliminating~~ ^{removing} plastic from our lives by simply packing products without it or substituting it with alternatives. For instance, in such shops ~~you may have your~~ ^{all} goods ^{are} stored in eco-friendly bins. Besides, you can seize your chance to care about the environment and bring your own containers rather than dispose those offered by a shop. Personally, I find this project crucial for all of us as it helps to preclude ~~disastrous~~ disastrous repercussions caused by an excessive plastic usage and ~~it~~ engenders interest in caring about the planet in further generations, which is of utmost importance.

RESPITE IN SPITE OF WORK

Out of the blue I turned into a book lying on a sandy beach somewhere in Zimbabwe. I have always dreamt of embarking on a magnificent journey to this place, however, failed to do so because of being "showed under" endless compilations of documents in my office. I felt perplexed as I was motionless and still had so many assignments to accomplish, ~~that~~ so my panic started without any delay.

"Someone, please help me, I can't move!" I bellowed at the top of my lungs ~~desperately~~ ^{desperately}. It seemed that I was just flogging a dead horse as the place was remote and only few beams of lustrous sun could accompany me.

"Oh, stop your clamour, we are all in the same boat and have nothing to do about it!" someone muttered. "Who is it? why can't I see you?" I said being even more baffled as I could not notice anyone around. ^{My name is Bill and} "You are on the island of industrious people who simply forgot about the importance of rest while seeking their best lives," the voice replied.

At first things seemed implausible and I even tried to pretend that I was asleep. Notwithstanding, the situation ^{remained} ~~was~~ the same. Afterwards to break the silence I promulgated my next question to ~~Bill~~ ^{Bill}.

"How long have you been here?" I asked hesitantly. "For a decade, I guess, if not longer..." he replied. Hardly could I say a word ~~when~~ ^{when} a gigantic wave ^{had} washed me into the ~~sea~~ ocean.

There I had no bounds: I could look around and finally move. The moment felt dazzling. For the first time I realized how splendid and precious the equanimity of rest ^{and levity} was. All my worries and trepidations vanished into the "stilted air of ~~sea~~ ^{ocean}". I closed my eyes to conjure up this moment forever...

When I woke up I was back at my deck and still had dozens of documents in front of me to peruse. It was just a dream. Only then did ~~realize~~ ^{realize} how precious the respite was.

At first things seemed implausible and I tried to pretend it was just a nightmare. Notwithstanding, it hasn't improved the situation, so I resolved to promulgate my next enquiry to the stranger. "How long have you been here?" I asked hesitantly. "For a decade, I guess," he answered. ~~Before even saying a word~~ a gigantic wave washed me into sea. if not longer. Hardly could I say a word when.

~~There, in the boundless~~ There I had no bounds: I could swim and in my finally more. The moment felt magnificent and dazzling. For the first time I realized how splendid it was to relish the "gratification of freedom", independence, and all my worries and elevations vanished in the stifled air of ocean. I closed ~~loosely~~ my eyes to conjure up this moment forever...
