Task 2

"Zero-Waste" grocery stores.

This text is written by Ian Wright from "The News". Plastic fibers are now contaminating our tap water. Plastic is a major problem in the world and new supermarkets can help solving it. This new supermarket is "Live Zero". The advantage of it is that there are no plastic packages. Goods are stored in clear self-service dispensers. All sorts of staples can be bought by weight. You can also buy reusable food containers and utensils there. Raphael De Ry is the founder of Edgar, zero-waste market in Hong Kong. He showed to Ian Wright his shop. There's also a serious call for legislative solutions to the packaging waste problem. The EU parliament banned single used plastics. Packaging waste is a problem worldwide. In the US packages from food products make up nearly a quarter of landfill waste.

California bans single-use plastic bags,
but unfortunately some of the states
"ban the ban" laws that forbid cities
from passing anti-plastic laws.

De Ry, thinks zero waste will continue to grow and has a great future ahead

Task 4

As I woke up, I found myself lying on the bookshelf of a library. To my surprise, I was a book. At first, I felt scared and disoriented, but then I realized that I could speak to other books. I started a dialogue with the "War and peace" book by Leo ~~Tolstoy~~ Tolstoy.

As I conversed with it, I learned that my transformation into a book was a result of a spell cast by a young witch who had been experimenting with her magic in the library after hours. The spell was meant to bring the characters in books to life, but unfortunately, she missed her aim and inadvertently transformed me into a book instead.

I spent days talking with various books, learning about their stories and the worlds they belonged to. I was fascinated by their unique perspective, thoughts and emotions. "War and peace" shared with me its struggles during wartime, the tragic love story of Natasha Rostova, and the philosophical musings of Pierre Bezukhov.

While I enjoyed these conversations, I also longed to return to my human form. One day, a

A kind-hearted librarian named Mrs. Smith noticed that I was not cataloged in the library system and decided to investigate further. She found me and discovered my true identity. She cast a counter-spell, which returned me to my human form.

As a human, I was grateful to be back in my skin, but I also felt a sense of loss. I missed my conversations with my book friends and the perspective that they offered. Nonetheless, I was happy to be back to my ordinary life, but I couldn't help ~~my~~ <sup>but</sup> wonder <sup>w</sup> that other magical and wondrous things existed in the world around me. I know I will never forget the time when I was a book.
