Task 2.

"Zero-Waste" grocery stores

By Ian Wright
The News

Plastic contamination is a serious problem nowadays, and people are beginning to be more aware of this fact. Therefore, a tendency to create "zero-waste" supermarkets has appeared recently.

The narrator was lucky enough to visit such a store, Live Zero, in Hong Kong, where plastic is used too often. In this shop, there is no plastic packagings and visitors have to bring their own containers ~~with~~ to fill them with what they need. Moreover, it is also possible to buy reusable items in Live Zero.

The governments of many countries has also begun to deal with the pollution of our environment. In the EU, for example, a law has been created to prohibit the use of plastic. In the USA, however, not all the states are ready to accept such laws. Nevertheless, this eco-friendly movement continues to develop.

Personally, I highly appreciate this movement. In my opinion, it is really important to stop using plastic so as to protect our planet.

Was It All Real?

I suddenly turned into a book that was lying on my table. It was a book containing some short stories about the adventures of a boy called Sam. I clearly remembered that I had never read this book and had always thought it was for little children. To turn me into its main character must have been a revenge from its author for underrating his creation.

~~It crossed my mind that I was in the story "Mysterious Village".~~ I was standing in the middle of the road among numerous houses which looked like they were inhabited by some dwarves. They were tiny and colourful, and their windows were shining in the sunlight. I knocked on the door of one of them, hoping to find help. A little boy greeted me: "Hi, Sam! Nice to see you again! How are you doing?" he sounded as if he was my close friend.

I hesitated a bit and then, so as not to appear suspicious, answered that I was fine. My new companion continued his speech in a funny voice:

"I need your help. My little sister has gone somewhere and we cannot find her for the whole day. My guess is that she has been kidnapped by the dog."

"What dog?" I interrupted him, for I was completely confused, to say the least.

"That huge dog Betty. It loves to play with my sister, and, as we do not always allow her to go out, Betty steals the girl. I want you to bring my sister back home!"

Surprisingly, I knew exactly where Betty was and made a beeline to the forest. My brain did not deceive me, and I found the little girl and the dog enjoying their time among the tall trees. I imagine the astonishment I felt when the dog spoke to me like a human! We quickly came to a consensus, and I returned the girl to her ^{again} brother. These two dwarves were so happy to ^{see} meet each other. The boy thanked me and treated to delicious homemade cookies.

Suddenly, I opened my eyes and saw my own room. Well, dear reader, now you understand that it was just a dream. Still, it was so realistic that it took me an hour to get used to the environment in my flat. I felt enormous pride for helping those small creatures. This dream definitely made my day!
